Other Teaching Experience

Early experimentation with distance delivery, including hybrid (1994), interactive television (1996, 1998), and online courses (1999, 2001, 2002). Recognized as a distance education pioneer by the UM Division of Continuing Education.

Supervised many student internships, independent studies, Honors theses, and served on many Honors and graduate thesis committees. Served on committees on effective teaching and large class instruction. Participated in University of Maine System conferences on assessment (1991), effective teaching (1988), and student aspirations (1987).

Teaching Evaluations

Received a score ranging between 1.0 and 1.27 on the summary evaluation question about the instructor for every course taught over sixteen years at the University of Maine, where 1.0 is the highest and 5.0 is the lowest possible score. Scored in the top 10% for Arts and Sciences faculty at USD on the summary measures of teaching excellence for American Political Thought.

IV. RESEARCH

Early research focused on the impact of the Christian Right in American politics, resulting in two books, an edited book on transnational religion and the nation-state, and several dozen articles, book chapters, and reviews. This scholarship was supported by competitive intramural grants at the University of Maine and garnered widespread attention from the national media. Other research streams included Congress, federalism, state politics, the presidency, and interdisciplinarity in the academy.

Currently writing on the transformation of higher education. Lecturing on dysfunction in democracy.

Books
